

Yassine Naser is a socio-professional master. He worked in several institutions that combine social work and organic farming. He uses nature as a support to learn to live together and as an effective therapeutic tool for teenagers with social problems and for adults with disabilities. His passion for nature led him to study agronomic engineering. He is also president of the Swiss section of AISA NGO International. This NGO, with special consultative status at the UN ECOSOC, focuses on the living together and the education for a culture of peace. Its initiative for an International day of living together in peace was unanimously accepted by all 193 UN Member States in 2017.